1. GET MORE MPG OUT OF YOUR DIESEL

Banks Power has come up with a new-generation diesel tuner that's aimed squarely at helping to take some of the sting out of today's sky-high diesel prices. Working in concert with Banks' free-breathing Ram-Air intake systems and Monster exhausts, the EconoMind can deliver fuel mileage gains as high as 20-percent. Even though the Banks EconoMind tuner was designed to provide fuel economy first and foremost, that doesn't mean its users will ever have to take a back seat in over-the-road performance.

2. STOP YOUR BIG TOY

The brakes on the new Tundra are very good; in fact, they stop the truck from 60 to 0 in 131 feet. The factory built 13.9-inch rotors and dual-piston calipers for the truck, but there is something you can install to shorten the stopping distance even more. A performance set of brake pads like the ones from Hawk feature specific friction materials to increase stopping power for your needs. For the Tundra, Hawk Performance offers pads in its LTS Ferro-carbon friction compound, Performance Ceramic, and Ferro-carbon, severe-duty SuperDuty compound. Contact Hawk to see which pads will work best for you and your Tundra.

4. CREATE A COOL GARAGE FLOOR

G-Floor from Better Life Technology (BLT) is easy to install and it can prevent water and dirt from migrating all over the garage. G-Floor is a 10-foot-wide, roll-out polyvinyl pad in four different styles that can be installed in minutes. Once down, it hides cracks, stains, and makes that old floor look new. The G-Floor is easy to clean and is impervious to oil and other fluids that tend to leak from vehicles.
